

Map Visualisation and Analysis for Community and Voluntary Groups

Maps are powerful visual tools. Information presented on a map can expose complex social, spatial, or environmental patterns, which help us to reconsider areas we think we know well, and make informed decisions.

Mapping for Change have many years' experience in using Geographical Information Systems to produce informative, educational and persuasive maps for community and voluntary groups.

Visualise and analyse. Collect and display evidence to boost the impact of your organisation's project simply and effectively with map visualisation and analysis. By representing information spatially, you can make significant connections and reinforce your message.

Communicate. Maps are powerful, persuasive tools. Visualising information on a map puts you at an advantage when communicating with decision makers and external groups. With a map, you can convey your point directly and make the evidence stand out.

Achieve change. Maps have always wielded great influence. Mapping for Change believe that maps offer community and voluntary groups a powerful way to enact changes in their local area, and we have been supporting third sector groups to do just this for many years.
